THE TEACHER'S CONTEST.

Votes are Coming in Thick and Fast.

MISS PENNY STILL LEADS

Miss Levy a Good Second and Miss Craighead Third--Miss Mabel Brungart and Miss Jennie Longacre Develope Strength.

THE VOTE AS RECORDED THIS WEEK.

Rain or shine, cold or warm, still they come. The Teacher's World's Fair Contest. Ballots are coming in pretty thick these days. Men, women and children are depositing the ballots. In addition to this many come through the mails and it is no small task to count them.

Miss Penny still leads but the others are not far behind. Miss Mable Brungart and Miss Jennie Longacre made good gains this week and one of them may yet land the prize.

While several of the candidates have rolled up large votes yet it is not to late for other candidates to win out. Candidates are not letting any grass grow under their feet and indications are that there will be a "grand stand" finish that will surprise those who have followed the voting from week to week.

The vote this week is as follows:

The Bellefonte REPUBLICAN and the DAILY NEWS, both under one management, have decided to make the most generous offer ever made by a newspaper in the history of Centre county. The offer is simply this: We will send to the great World's Fair at St Louis next summer the most popular school teacher, lady or gentleman, in Centre county, paying all expenses such as car fare, hotel bills, and admission to the fair grounds.

Who is the most popular school teacher and therefore the lucky one take in the World's Fair? This will be decided by the readers of the DAILY NEWS and Bellefonte REPUBLICAN. A coupon will be published in each issue of both papers from now on until June 11, 1904, and you simply have to write your choice on the ballot and send it to this office. The fortunate one receiving the most votes in the given time takes the trip

The following are the rules and regulations:

RULES GOVERNING CONTEST.

FIRST.—The contest is open to any teacher, lady or gentleman, providing he or she is a teacher of a Centre county school.

SECOND.—Three judges agreeable to the candidates will be selected to officially count the final vote and announce the winner.

THIRD.—Matters properly concerning the tour will be settled by the wishes of the majority. The winner shall have the right to name a proxy if unable to attend theirself.

FOURTH.—Only one name can be written on a coupon. The vote of one candidate cannot be transferred to another. Ballots will be placed in the box only by the publisher of the REPUBLICAN and NEWS or by his bookkeeper.

FIFTH.—Voting will commence at once and will close Saturday, June 11, 1904, at 7 o'clock in the evening. Coupons over ten days old cannot be voted. Votes will be counted each week and the totals announced in the Thursday issues of the REPUBICAN and NEWS No coupons will be sold, but to each new or old subscriber paying $1 on either paper will be given a coupon which will entitle the holder to fifty votes if the dollar is paid before the 15th day of April, forty votes if paid between April 15, and May 15, and thirty votes if paid between May 15 and June 11 at 7 o'clock in the evening. For every dollar paid on subscription the subscriber will be entitled to fifty, forty or thirty votes, according to when the dollar is paid.

The object of this distribution being to place a premium on early payments of subscription, hurry up and pay your subscription and vote for the teacher of your choice.

Republican-News Voting Coupon.

This Coupon is Good for Six Votes for

World's Fair Tour

APRIL 14.

Cut out and deposit in the ballot box at Bellefonte REPUBLICAN office. This coupon is void if not voted within ten days from date.

A NEEDY CHAPEL

Great Damage Done by the Recent Floods.

The Pleasant View chapel recently constructed on a lot given by the Shoemaker estate between Bellefonte and Milesburg is one that is doing a great deal of good and certainly deserves the assistance of all the churches in our town. During the floods this spring the beautiful lawn around the chapel was completely destroyed and left the place in a very dilapidated condition. Some of the members of this small congregation will solicit aid to replace what they have lost. Don't refuse them for they are doing a good work which should be carried on in the Master's name.

Death of Josiah Toot.

Josiah Toot, an old citizen of this place, died Monday morning at 9:30 o'clock at the home of his sister, Mrs. Jonathan Miller on Reynolds Avenue. Death was due to a breaking down of the system, he was only ill two weeks.

Deceased was born in Millheim and was 69 years of age on the 15th of Oct. He was an active member of the Methodist church and ready and prepared to die. He is survived by the following brothers and sisters: Mrs. Daniel Straub, of Selinsgrove; John, of Clearfield; Thomas, of Johnsonburg, and Mrs. Jonathan Miller, of Bellefonte.

The funeral took place Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Rev. John A. Wood Jr., officiating. Interment in the Union cemetery.

Death of John Pouts.

On Saturday April 2 at 2 o'clock p. m. all that was mortal of John Pouts took on immortality. He passed away at his home at Graysville his death having been caused by uraemic poisoning as a result of an operation he underwent some years ago.

Deceased was a blacksmith by trade and worked at Penna. Furnace, where he was regarded as an expert mechanic, as well as a good citizen, kind neighbor and indulgent father. He was 62 years old and is survived by his widow and three children.

Funeral services were held at his late residence Tuesday morning April 5 at 9 o'clock, after which the body was taken to Altoona for burial.

Death of Erma Billett.

On Monday afternoon at twenty minutes of four, Erma the bright and pretty little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Billett passed in to the great beyond after a weeks illness with diphtheria.

Erma was nine years old and was the pride of the home. She had a sweet lovable disposition and had hosts of little friends. In her school she was considered one of the brightest scholars, and by her kind acts she was admired by all her playmates. She was laid to rest in the Union cemetery Tuesday afternoon, only the immediate family being in attendance.

ARBOR DAY EXERCISES.

How it was Observed at Mann's School House.

IN CURTIN TOWNSHIP

Address by Judge John G. Love, Senator Heinle, John A. Daley, Henry Thompson and Others.

A DAY LONG TO BE REMEMBERED.

Friday, April 8, 1904, will long be quite favorably remembered by the people not only of Mann's school district; but all over Curtin township, as well as by many from neighboring township's, Bellefonte and elsewhere. The observation of Spring Arbor day by the Mann school brought together an audience such as cannot help but greatly encourage those interested in the advancement of public school affairs. Not only was the assemblage of people large in numbers but the intelligence thereof was far above the average as it is that class of people which constantly and under all circumstances aids and encourages strict obedience to laws enacted for the benefit of the people at large.

The observation of Arbor Day by the Mann School on Friday is the second occasion of the kind, what was designated as the 1903 Fall Arbor Day also being fittingly observed by the same school management. Thus Curtin township has set the pace for every other township and borough in the county to follow, which has heretofore not done so. The Mann school house is of larger dimensions than the average rural school building, but its capacity was overtaxed last Friday. Representative people were present from neighboring townships and boroughs and the exercises were of the highest character. The school excelled itself by rendering a program of dialogues, declamations, essays, music, etc. Each and every pupil demonstrated that he and she were thoroughly interested, not only in the exercises within the school room, but as well on the grounds where the promising trees were planted. The idea of tree planting was so vividly impressed upon the minds of the scholars that they were not content until each had planted for him and herself a tiny tree commemorating the occasion. A dozen or so promising looking maples of proper size were planted, and these with the number planted last fall, give the Mann school house grounds an appearance which no other district need be ashamed to follow.

The addresses of the day were thoroughly in accordance with the occasion. Ex-Senator W. C. Heinle, of Bellefonte, in his usually dignified manner, entertained the large audience with a masterly address such as only an orator deeply interested in public school affairs can deliver. Senator Heinle was formerly a highly successful school teacher and is at present one of Centre County's most progressive and faithful school directors.

Judge John G. Love, who for the past nine years has so acceptably presided over the Centre county courts, was present and his address to the intelligent audience vividly demonstrated the depth of thought in which the Judge thinks, moves and has his intellectual being. He is always found in the front ranks of progress and his admiration for a law abiding people is excelled by no one on or off the bench. He is, in addition a thorough American and considers his country far above that of any nation on the face of the globe. He eloquently brought out the fact, that the advancement and perpetuation of this government depends almost wholly on the Home and the Public School. Disrupt these two forces and our day as a nation will soon be over.

Other addresses were made. Among them was one by Hon. John A. Daley, president of the Curtin township school board. He said he was proud of Curtin township, its people and its schools, and well may he be, for there are none better anywhere. Justice of the Peace John Knarr made a comparison of the opportunities afforded school children when he was a pupil with what they are today. His comparisons were well and ably made. Mr. Henry Thompson, of Howard, a former school teacher and one of Centre county's most progressive citizens, was present. Following a few remarks, he sang a Union school song he learned when a boy attending public school many years ago. Rev. Azure, who lately moved into the township from Williamsport was also called upon and he made an exceptionally favorable impression upon the minds of the people of the community. His lullaby song in German was par excellence and won many encomiums of praise.

Altogether Spring Arbor Day 1904 at Mann's school will never be forgotten.

EASTER SERVICES.

Beautiful Easter Services Held by Presbyterian Sunday School.

The Presbyterian Sunday school held its annual Easter services in the Presbyterian church on Sunday evening at 7:30 o'clock. In spite of the fact that other churches were holding special services, the big edifice was crowded many driving in from the country.

The program rendered was a most pleasing one and reflected great credit on those who worked so hard to make the affair the success it was

The chancel was beautifully adorned with potted plants and flowers in great profusion and presented an inviting appearance. The evenings exercises consisted of a beautiful song service entitled "Behold Him Risen" and interesting recitations by the little folks. Prof. Christy Smith with a full orchestra added inspiration to the occasion by accompanying the music.

There were recitations by Ethel Dale, Elizabeth Galbraith, Ellen Hayes, Catherine Etters, Lucretia Williams, Thomas Morgan, Mary Warfield and Julia Curtin. A very pretty duet was rendered by Mildred Locke and Dorothy Jenkins.

Melvin Bassett, a little tot from Baltimore, Md., a grandson of Rev. James P. Hughes, made quite a hit with a solo, a chorus of seven boys accompanying him. Little Mary Warfield, a daughter of Frank Warfield, also delighted the large audience by cleverly rendering a recitation.

Seven boys in a dialogue entitled "Easter Keys" were represented by Girard Altenderfer, Daniel Irvin, Robert Walker, Luther Crissman, Albert Morrison, Edward Armsby, and a son of County Treasurer Foster.

The Motion song by the primary class and the chorus "Easter Bells" were also very pretty and well rendered.

Mrs. J. C. Meyer and Miss Helen Crissman rendered a very pretty duet.

The pastor, Dr. Laurie gave the young folks a very interesting talk and the superintendent of the Sunday school Prof. James R. Hughes recited an Easter poem.

We can't close this article without praising the work of Miss Helen Overton and her four assistants, Misses Helen Williams, Daisy Barnes, Edith Graham and Ottilie Hughes. They worked hard in araining the children and their efforts were surely crowned with success.

"THE RESURRECTION MORN."

A Beautiful Entertainment Produced by Lutheran Sunday School.

One of the prettiest entertainments held in Bellefonte for a long time was "The Resurrection Morn" produced by the members of the St. John's Lutheran Sunday school on Sunday evening. The performance consisted of four acts, and the different parts were taken in an admirable manner by each participant.

The principal characters were the following "Pilate" A. A. Dale, Esq., "Centurian" Harry Smith, "Guards" John Kreps and Frank Ocker, "Jesus" A. A. Dale, "Pilates Servant" Mr. Ferry, "Joseph of Armathea" Thomas Hazel, "Mary Magdalene," Miss Kate Armbuster, "Nicodemus" Harvey Schaffer, "Three Women at the Tomb," Roxie O'Brien, Florence Mulbarger and Helen Robb, "Chief Priest" J. F. Garthoff, "Disciples" W. P. Kuhn, Thomas Hazel, "Thomas" H. Schaffer, "The Angel of the Tomb" Mrs. Chas. Hazel. The characters taken by Miss Armbuster, Mrs. Hazel and Mr. Dale were quite difficult but they deserve much credit for the manner in which they performed their parts.

The recitations and readings by the children were executed in a splendid manner and they carried out their part on the program to perfection.

BOY BURGLARS CAUGHT

Given a Hearing and Put on Their Good Behavior—Tramps are Giving the Town a Wide Berth—Two Diphtheria Deaths.

JOSIAH TOOT HAS PASSED AWAY.

Monday morning of this week Henry Brown swore out an information upon which a warrant was issued by Squire Keichline for the arrest of Earl Freeman, aged 12, and William Wolfe, aged 10, charged with breaking into the store and repair shop of Henry Brown on Sunday April 3 1, and taking four revolvers that were left there for repairs, and also one flute

From the statement of the boys the following facts appeared:—That on Sunday Freeman met Wolfe down at the Chineman's Laundry and told him that he had seen several revolvers hanging inside of Mr. Brown's shop and that they could get them.

The two boys went down to the window, Wolfe breaking it in with his fist, turning the lock on the window, raised the lower window and reached in, taking one revolver.

This was at four o'clock in the afternoon. Freeman also took a revolver. Freeman said that after he had taken the revolver he found that it was no good, and that he wanted a good one, so went back the same evening about nine o'clock and took two more. He said that the flute fell out of the window and for fear that some one would notice it he hid it in a chicken coop near Brown's store. The boys kept the four revolvers until Monday when they tried to sell them to other people for fifteen and twenty cents each.

Freeman in answer to a question from the Justice, whether he wanted to see his mother before he was sent to jail said that he did'nt want to see any one. Both boys knew that it was wrong to steal, at least so they said. After promising to be better boys, to go to school, etc., the justice continued the case. The parents however to enter into a bond for their good behavior and paying the costs.

Henry Brown was represented at the hearing by W. Harrison Walker, Esq., The Police Officers of the Borough deserve credit for running down these two young burglars.

TRAMPS MUST STAY AWAY.

Last Friday another tramp was caught in Bellefonte and lodged in jail. He said his name was Daniel Barker from Corning, N. Y. Saturday morning he was brought before Burgess W. Harrison Walker who proceeded to sentence him to work on the streets with the Ball and Chain attachments, but before he had gone away from the office a great distance a telegram came from Lock Haven that James Pepper, alias Daniel Barker was wanted by the authorities at that place. Monday morning the Constable from Lock Haven took Mr. Pepper there to await trial in Court for another crime of a graver nature than vagrancy.

No tramps have been seen or heard of in Bellefonte since the Ball and Chain Ordinance was executed last week.

W. S. Mayo.

At 10 o'clock Saturday morning Mr. W. S. Mayo died at his home in Knox, Clarion county, aged 70 years. The deceased was born in Bellefonte, Centre county, and is survived by four children Mrs. William Mayo, of Bradford; Mrs. Robert Melrose, of Pittsburg; Mrs. Lida Jacobs, of Shirleysburg. Huntingdon county, and Mrs. James Hyland, of Altoona.

He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. His death was the result of an accident which occurred two years ago in which his skull was fractured. He had a large number of friends and relatives.

The funeral took place Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

—Alvah S. Grow, of Philadelphia, at one time associate editor of the Bellefonte Republican, was a pleasant caller at this office while in town on business Saturday.

THE DEMOCRACY.

They Held a Convention in Bellefonte Saturday.

An adjourned meeting of last years democratic county convention was held in the Court House here Saturday for the purpose of electing two delegates to the Democratic State convention. The convention was called to order by County Chairman H. S. Taylor. In the absence of W. Miles Walker, the chairman of the convention, who was unable to be present Capt. Taylor delegated Col. J. I. Spangler to act as presiding officer. Col. Spangler made a speech to the convention in which everything Republican was bad and everything democratic good.

Reading clerk H. D. Rumberger read the call reconvening the convention. He then read the roll call which showed twenty-five absentees. The work of the convention was nicely cut and dried.

S. A. McQuistion, of Bellefonte, nominated Dr. F. K. White, of Philipsburg, and Pierce Musser, of Millheim, nominated Robert M. Foster, of State College, for delegates to State convention. H. D. Rumberger moved that nominations close and that Messrs. Foster and White be elected unanimously. It was so ordered.

John J. Bower read a resolution endorsing J. C. Meyer Esq., of Bellefonte for delegate to the Democratic National convention at St. Louis and moved its adoption. It was seconded by Jerry O. Donavan and carried unanimously.

Joseph Peters spoke urging the conferees to do all they could for Mr. Meyer.

Speechs were made by J. C. Meyer, Hon. Robert M. Foster and others.

WILLIAM HANNON.

Died at the Bellefonte Hospital Friday Morning.

William Hannon, of Howard, died at the Bellefonte Hospital Friday morning at 3:30 o'clock, as a result of burns which he received from the explosion of a torch Saturday night between 12 and 1 o'clock while at Harbinson-Walker brick works at Monument near Beech Creek. He was the night watchman there and about mid-night was in the engine room. In some unaccountable way his torch set fire to his coat. In an instant the man's clothing was all ablaze. Perfectly helpless and liable to a most excruciating death he blew the whistle at the works and it summoned a watchman from another department to his aid. The flames were extinguished but not before he was badly burned about the right side, arm, neck and face. He was taken to his home at Howard and on Thursday afternoon he was brought to the Bellefonte Hospital.

The unfortunate man was about 54 years of age. He was married to Elizabeth James of near Eagleville who survives him with the following children: Malcolm, Stuart, Hurbert, and Arthur all of Howard, and a step-son Norman Lighthammer, of the same place.

Death of an Aged Lady.

On Monday morning April 4, at 2 o'clock Mrs. Jno. D. Naginey died at her home in Kishacoquillas Valley, Mifflin county, aged 75 years to the day. The week before when her son Frank of Bellefonte visited her for the last time, she told him of her desire to live till Monday of this week which would be her 76th birthday, and her wish was gratified—her death taking place two hours after the day was ushered in.

Mrs. Naginey was a kind mother, a good neighbor and a devout Christian lady—having been a prominent member of the Presbyterian church for many years. She is survived by six children, viz: Mrs. John E. Deery, of Phoenixville; Morris, William and Robert, of Milroy; Frank E. of Bellefonte, and Mary E. widow of the late Rev. J. Foster Bell, with whom she made her home. The funeral took place Wednesday when her remains were followed to their last resting place in East Kishacoquillas cemetery by a large concourse of relatives and friends in whose memory she will live long as the highest type of Christian womanhood.

Pennsy Places Big Order.

It was rumored that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company had placed and order for 2,125 steel cars. The cars will probably be used for shipping of coal. Operators in the Pittisburg district received the news with great satisfaction. The order will be divided between the American Car and Foundry Company. The former will make 1,000 cars, while the latter will furnish the balance. With the order placed by the Pittsburg and Lake Erie railroads, this makes a total of 3,125 steel cars contracted for in the last few days.

—Over a hundred persons attended Mr. Shuey's class in the Methodist Church Monday evening.

"Son," said the captain, making a bundle of all the papers, "take these over to my bunk and hide 'em under the donkey's breakfast. Stop a bit," he added as Wilbur started away. "I'll go with you. We'll have to bury the old man."

Throughout all the afternoon the captain had been drinking the whisky from the decanter found in the cabin. Now he stood up unsteadily, and, raising his glass, exclaimed:

"Sonny, here's to Kitchell, Wilbur & Co., beachcombers, un-limited. What do you say, hey?"

"I only want to be sure that we've a right to the bark," answered Wilbur.

"Right to 'er—ri-hight to 'er!" hiccoughed the captain. "Strike me blind, I'd like to see any one try an' take her away from Alvinza Kitchell now!" And he thrust out his chin at Wilbur.

"Well, so much the better, then," said Wilbur, pocketing the papers. The pair ascended to the deck.

The burial of Captain Sternersen was a dreadful business. Kitchell, far gone in whisky, stood on the house issuing his orders, drinking from one of the decanters he had brought up with him. He had already rifled the dead man's pockets and had even taken away the boots and fur lined cap. Cloths were cut from the spanker and rolled around the body. Then Kitchell ordered the peak halyards unrove and used as lashings to tie the canvas around the corpse. The red and white flags, the distress signals, were still bound on the halyards.

"Leave 'em on! Leave 'em on!" commanded Kitchell. "Use 'em as a shrou'; All ready now; stan' by to let her go!"

Wilbur looked over at the schooner and noted, with immense relief, that Moran was not in sight. Suddenly an abrupt reaction took place in the captain's addled brain.

"Can't bury 'um 'ithout 'is teeth," he gabbled solemnly. He laid back the canvas and replaced the set. "Ole man 'd ha'nt me 'f I kep' 's teeth. Strike, look a' that! I put 'em in upside down. Nev' min', ups!' down, downs!' up, whaz odds, all same with ole Bill. Hey, ole Bill, all same with you, hey?" Suddenly he began to howl with laughter. "T' think o' bein' buried with your teeth ups!' down! Oh, me, but that's a good grind! Stan' by to heave ole Uncle Bill over! Ready, heave, an' away she goes!" He ran to the side, waving his hat and looking over. "Goo'by, ole Bill, by by! There you go, an' the signal o' distress roun' you—H B! 'I'm in need of assistance.' Lord, here comes the sharks! Look, look! Look at 'um fight! Look at 'um takin' ole Bill! 'I'm in need of assistance.' I sh'd say you were, ole Bill!"

Wilbur looked once over the side in the churning, lashing water, then drew back, sick to vomiting. But in less than thirty seconds the water was quiet. Not a shark was in sight.

"Get over t' the Bertha with those papers, son," ordered Kitchell. "I'll bide here and dig up sh' more loot. I'll gut this ole pill box from stern to stem post 'fore I'll leave. I won't leave a copper rivet in 'er, notta co'er rivet, do y' hear?" he shouted, his face purple with unnecessary rage.

Wilbur returned to the schooner with the two Chinamen, leaving Kitchell alone on the bark. He found the girl sitting by the rudderhead almost as he had left her, looking about her with vague, unseeing eyes.

"Your name is Moran, isn't it," he asked—"Moran Sternersen?"

"Yes," she said after a pause, then looked curiously at a bit of tarred rope on the deck. Nothing more could be got out of her. Wilbur talked to her at length and tried to make her understand the situation, but it was evident she did not follow. However, at each mention of her name she would answer:

"Yes, yes; I'm Moran."

Wilbur turned away from her, biting his nether lip in perplexity.

"Now, what am I going to do?" he muttered. "What a situation! If I tell the captain, it's all up with the girl. If he didn't kill her, he'd do worse—might do both. If I don't tell him, there goes her birthright, $60,000, and she alone in the world. It's begun to go already," he added, listening to the sounds that came from the bark. Kitchell was raging to and fro in the cabin in a frenzy of drink, ax in hand, smashing glassware, hacking into the woodwork, singing the while at the top of his voice.

"That's the kind of man I have to deal with," muttered Wilbur. "It's encouraging, and there's no one to talk to. Not much help in a Chinaman and a crazy girl in a man's oilskins. It's about the biggest situation you ever faced, Ross Wilbur, and you're all alone. What are you going to do?"

He acknowledged with considerable humiliation that he could not get the better of Kitchell either physically or mentally. Kitchell was a more powerful man than he and cleverer. The captain was in his element now, and he was the commander. On shore it would have been vastly different. The city bred fellow, with a policeman always in call, would have known how to act.

"I simply can't stand by and see that hog plundering everything she's got. What's to be done?"

And suddenly, while the words were yet in his mouth, the sun was wiped from the sky like writing from a slate, the horizon blackened, vanished, a long white line of froth whipped across the sea and came on hissing. A hollow note boomed out, boomed, swelled and grew rapidly to a roar.

An icy chill stabbed the air. Then the squall swooped and struck, and the sky shut down over the troubled ocean like a pot lid over a boiling pot. The schooner's fore and main sheets, that had not been made fast, unrove at the first gust and began to slat wildly in the wind. The Chinamen cowered to the decks, grasping at cleats, stays and masts. They were helpless, paralyzed with fear. Charlie clung to a stay, one arm over his head as though dodging a blow. Wilbur gripped the rail with his hands where he stood, his teeth set, his eyes wide, waiting for the foundering of the schooner, his only thought being that the end could not be far. He had heard of the suddenness of tropical squalls, but this had come with the abruptness of a scene shift at a play. The schooner veered broad on to the waves. It was the beginning of the end. Another roll to the leeward like the last and the Pacific would come aboard.

"And you call yourselves sailor men! Are you going to drown like rats on a plank?" A voice that Wilbur did not know went ringing through that horrid shouting of wind and sea like the call of a bugle. He turned to see Moran, the girl of the Lady Letty, standing erect upon the quarter deck holding down the schooner's wheel. The confusion of that dreadful moment, that had paralyzed the crew's senses, had brought back hers. She was herself again—savage, splendid, dominant, superb in her wrath at their weakness—their cowardice.

Her heavy brows were knotted over her flaming eyes, her hat was gone, and her thick bands of yellow hair whipped across her face and streamed out in the wind like streamers of the northern lights. As she shouted, gesturing furiously to the men, the loose skin of the oilskin coat fell back and showed her forearm, strong, round and white as scud, the hand and wrist so tanned as to look almost like a glove. And all the while she shouted aloud, furious with indignation, raging against the supineness of the Bertha's crew.

"Stand by, men! Stand by! Look alive, now! Make fast the stays'l halyards to the dory's warp! Now, then, unreeve y'r halyards! All clear there! Pass the end for'ard outside the rigging. Outside, you fools! Make fast to the bits for'ard! Let go y'r line! That'll do. Soh—soh. There, she's coming up."

The dory had been [illegible]ern, and the seas, combin[illegible] had swamped her. Moran had been inspired to use the swamped boat as a sea anchor, fastening her to the schooner's bow instead of to the stern. The Bertha's bow, answering to the drag, veered around. The Bertha stood head to the seas, riding out the squall. It was a masterpiece of seamanship, conceived and executed in the very thick of peril, and it saved the schooner.

But there was little time to think of themselves. On board the bark the sails were still set. The squall struck the Lady Letty squarely aback. She heeled over upon the instant, then, as the top hamper carried away with a crash, eased back a moment upon an even keel. But her cargo had shifted. The bark was doomed. Through the flying spray and scud and rain Wilbur had a momentary glimpse of Kitchell hacking at the lanyards with his ax. Then the Lady Letty capsized, going over till her masts were flat with the water, and in another second rolled bottom up. For a moment her keel and red iron bottom were visible through the mist of driving spoondrift. Suddenly they sank from sight. She was gone.

And then, like the rolling up of a scroll, the squall passed, the sun returned, the sky burned back to blue, the ruggedness was smoothed from the ocean, and the warmth of the tropics closed around the Bertha Milliner, once more rolling easily on the swell of the ocean.

Of the Lady Letty and the drunken beachcombing captain not a trace remained. Kitchell had gone down with his prize. The Bertha Milliner's Chinese crew huddled forward, talking wildly, pointing and looking in a bewildered fashion over the sides.

Wilbur and Moran were left alone on the open Pacific.

CHAPTER V.

WHEN Wilbur came on deck the morning after the sinking of the bark he was surprised to find the schooner under way again. Wilbur and Charlie had berthed forward during that night, Charlie with the hands, Wilbur in the captain's hammock. The reason for this change of quarters had been found in a peremptory order from Moran during the dog watch the preceding evening.

She had looked squarely at Wilbur from under her scowl and had said briefly and in a fine contralto voice that he had for the first time noted: "I berth aft in the cabin; you and the Chinaman forward. Understand?"

Moran had only forestalled Wilbur's intention, while after her almost miraculous piece of seamanship in the rescue of the schooner Charlie and the Chinese crew accorded her a respect that was almost superstitious.

Wilbur met her again at breakfast. She was still wearing men's clothing—part of Kitchell's outfit—and was booted to the knee, but now she wore no hat, and her enormous mane of rye colored hair was braided into long strands near to the thickness of a man's arm. The redness of her face gave a startling effect to her pale blue eyes and sandy, heavy eyebrows that easily lowered to a frown. She ate with her knife, and after pushing away her plate Wilbur observed that she drank half a tumbler of whisky and water.

The conversation between the two was tame enough. There was no common ground upon which they could meet. To her father's death—no doubt an old matter even before her rescue—she made no allusion. Her attitude toward Wilbur was one of defiance and suspicion. Only once did she relax.

"How did you come to be aboard here with these rat eaters? You're no sailor," she said abruptly.

"Huh!" laughed Wilbur mirthlessly. "Huh! I was shanghaied."

Moran smote the table with a red fist and shouted with sonorous, bell toned laughter:

"Shanghaied—you? Now, that is really good! And what are you going to do now?"

"What are you going to do?"

"Signal the first home bound vessel and be taken into Frisco. I've my insurance to collect (Wilbur had given her the Letty's papers) and the disaster to report."

"Well, I'm not keen on shark hunting myself," said Wilbur. But Moran showed no interest in his plans.

However, they soon found that they were not to be permitted to signal. At noon the same day the schooner sighted a steamship's smoke on the horizon and began to raise her rapidly. Moran immediately bound on the ensign, union down, and broke it out at the peak.

Charlie, who was at the wheel, spoke a sentence in Chinese, and one of the hands drew his knife across the halyards and brought the distress signal to the deck. Moran turned upon Charlie with an oath, her brows knotted.

"No, no!" sang Charlie, closing his eyes and wagging his head. "No! Too muchee los' time; no can stop. You come down side cabin; you an' one piece boss No. 2 (this was Wilbur) have um chin-chin."

The odd conclave assembled about Kitchell's table—the clubman, the half masculine girl in men's clothes and the Chinaman. The conference was an angry one, Wilbur and Moran insisting that they be put aboard the steamship, Charlie refusing with calm obstinacy.

"I have um chin-chin with China boys las' nigh', China boy heap flaid no can stop um steamship; heap flaid too much talkee-talkee; no stop; go fish now; go fish chop-chop; los' heap time; go fish. I no savvy sail um boat; China boy no savvy sail um boat. I tinkum you savvy (and he pointed to Moran). I tinkum you savvy plenty heap much disa bay. Boss No. 2 no savvy sail um boat, but him savvy plenty many all same."

"And we're to stop on board your dough dish and navigate her for you?" shouted Moran, her face blazing.

Charlie nodded blandly. "I tinkum yass."

"And when we get back to port," exclaimed Wilbur, "you think perhaps I—we won't make it interesting for you?"

Charlie smiled.

"I tinkum ship company heap rich."

"Well, get along," ordered Moran, as though the schooner was her property, "and we'll talk it over."

"China boy lika you heap pretty big," said Charlie to Moran as he went out. "You savvy sail um boat all light; wanta you fo' captain. But," he added, suddenly dropping his bland passivity as though it were a mask and for an instant allowing the wicked malevolent Cantonese to come to the surface, "China boy no likee funnee business. Savvy?" Then, with the smile of a Talleyrand, he disappeared.

Moran and Wilbur were helpless for the present. They were but two against seven Chinamen. They must stay on board if the coolies wished it, and if they were to stay it was a matter of their own personal safety that the Bertha Milliner should be properly navigated.

"I'll captain her," concluded Moran sullenly at the end of their talk. "You must act as mate, Mr. Wilbur. And don't get any mistaken idea into your head that because I'm a young girl and alone you are going to run things your way. I don't like funny business any better than Charlie."

"Look here," said Wilbur, complaining, "don't think I'm altogether a villain. I think you're a ripping fine girl. You're different from any kind of girl I ever met, of course, but you, by jingo, you're—you're splendid! There in the squall last evening, when you stood at the wheel, with your hair"—

"Oh, drop that!" said the girl contemptuously, and went up on deck. Wilbur followed, scratching his ear.

Charlie was called aft and their decision announced. Moran would navigate the Bertha Milliner, Wilbur and she taking the watches. Charlie promised that he would answer for the obedience of the men.

Their first concern now was to shape their course for Magdalena bay. Moran and Wilbur looked over Kitchell's charts and logbook, but the girl flung them aside disdainfully.

"He's been sailing by the dead reckoning, and his navigation is drivel. Why, a cabin boy would know better, and, to end with, the chronometer is run down. I'll have to get Greenwich time by taking the altitude of a star tonight and figure out our longitude. Did you bring off our sextant?"

Wilbur shook his head. "Only the papers," he said.

"There's only an old ebony quadrant here," said Moran, "but it will have to do."

That night, lying flat on her back on the deck, with the quadrant to her eye,

"And we're to stop on board your dough dish?"

she "got a star and brought it down to the horizon" and sat up under the reeking lamp in the cabin nearly the whole night ciphering and ciphering till she had filled up the four sides of the log slate with her calculations. However, by daylight she had obtained the correct Greenwich time and worked the schooner's longitude.

Two days passed, then a third. Moran set the schooner's course. She kept almost entirely to herself, and when not at the wheel or taking the sun or writing up the log gloomed over the after rail into the schooner's wake. Wilbur knew not what to think of her. Never in his life had he met with any girl like this. So accustomed had she been to the rough give and take, direct associations of a seafaring life, that she misinterpreted well meant politeness, the only respect he knew how to pay her, to mean insidious advances. She was suspicious of him, distrusted him utterly and openly ridiculed his abortive seamanship. Pretty she was not, but she soon began to have a certain amount of attraction for Wilbur. He liked her splendid ropes of hair, her heavy contralto voice, her fine animal strength of bone and muscle (admittedly greater than his own). He admired her indomitable courage and self reliance, while her positive genius in the matters of seamanship and navigation filled him with speechless wonder. The girls he had been used to were clever only in their knowledge of the amenities of an afternoon call or the formalities of a paper german.

A girl of two and twenty who could calculate longitude from the altitude of a star was outside his experience. The more he saw of her the more he knew himself to have been right in his first estimate. She drank whisky after her meals, and when angry, which was often, swore like a buccaneer. As yet she was almost, as one might say, without sex—savage, unconquered, untamed, glorying in her own independence, her sullen isolation. Her neck was thick, strong and very white, her hands roughened and calloused. In her men's clothes she looked tall, vigorous and unrestrained, and on more than one occasion as Wilbur passed close to her he was made aware that her hair, her neck, her entire personality, exhaled a fine, sweet, natural redolence that savored of the ocean and great winds.

One day as he saw her handling a huge water barrel by the chines only with a strength he knew to be greater than his own, her brows contracted with the effort, her hair curling about her thick neck, her large, round arms bare to the elbow, a sudden thrill of enthusiasm smote through him, and between his teeth he exclaimed to himself:

"By Jove, you're a woman!"

The Bertha Milliner continued to the southward, gliding quietly over the oil smoothness of the ocean under airs so light as hardly to ruffle the surface. Sometimes at high noon the shimmer of the ocean floor blended into the shimmer of the sky at the horizon, and then it was no longer water and blue heavens. The little craft seemed to be poised in a vast crystalline sphere where there was neither height nor depth—poised motionless in warm, coruscating, opalescent space, alone with the sun.

At length one morning the schooner, which for the preceding twenty-four hours had been heading eastward, raised the land and by the middle of the afternoon had come up to within a mile of a low, sandy shore, quivering with heat, and had tied up to the kelp in Magdalena bay.

Charlie now took over entire charge of operations. For two days previous the Chinese hands had been getting out the deck tubs, tackles, gaffs, spades and the other shark fishing gear that had been stowed forward. The sails were lowered and gasketed, the decks cleared of all impedimenta, hogsheads and huge vats stood ready in the waist, and the lazy indolence of the previous week was replaced by an extraordinary activity.

The day after their arrival in the bay was occupied by all hands in catching bait. This bait was a kind of rockfish of a beautiful red gold color and about the size of an ordinary cod. They bit readily enough, but out of every ten hooked three were taken off the lines by the sharks before they could be brought aboard. Another difficulty lay in the fact that, either because of the excessive heat in the air or the percentage of alkali in the water, they spoiled almost immediately if left in the air.

Turtle were everywhere—floating gray green disks just under the surface. Sea birds in clouds clamored all day long about the shore and sand pits. At long intervals flying fish skittered over the water like skipping stones. Shoals of porpoises came in from outside, leaping clumsily along the edges of the kelp. Bewildered land birds perched on the schooner's rigging, and in the early morning the whistling of quail could be heard on shore near where a little fresh water stream ran down to meet the ocean.

It was Wilbur who caught the first shark on the second morning of the Bertha's advent in Magdalena bay. A store of bait had been accumulated, split and halved into chunks for the shark hooks, and Wilbur, baiting one of the huge lines that had been brought up on deck the evening before, flung it overboard and watched the glimmer of the white fish meat turning to a silvery green as it sank down among the kelp. Almost instantly a long, moving shadow, just darker than the blue green mass of the water, identified itself at a little distance.

Enormous flukes proceeded from either side, an erect dorsal fin, like an enormous cock's crest, rose from the back, while immediately over the head swam the two pilot fish, following so closely the movement of the shark as to give the impression of actually adhering to his body. Twice and three times the great man eater, twelve feet from snout to tail tip, circled fanlike through the water. Once he came up, touched the bait with his nose and backed easily away. He disappeared, returned and poised himself motionless in the schooner's shadow, feeling the water with his flukes.

Moran was looking over Wilbur's shoulder. "He's as good as caught," she muttered. "Once let them get sight of meat, and— Steady, now!" The shark moved forward. Suddenly, with a long, easy roll, he turned completely upon his back. His white belly flashed like silver in the water. The bait disappeared.

"You've got him!" shouted Moran.

The rope slid through Wilbur's palms, burning the skin as the huge sea wolf sounded. Moran laid hold. The heavy, sullen wrenching from below twitched and swayed their bodies and threw them against each other. Her bare, cool arm was pressed close over his knuckles.

"Heave!" she cried, laughing with the excitement of the moment. "Heave all!" She began the chant of sailors hauling at the ropes. Together and bracing their feet against the schooner's rail, they fought out the fight with the great fish. In a swirl of lather the head and shoulders came above the surface, the flukes churning the water till it boiled like the wake of a screw steamship. But as soon as these great fins were clear of the surface the shark fell quiet and helpless.

Charlie came up with the cutting-in spade and as the fish hung still over the side cut him open from neck to belly with a single movement. Another Chinaman stood by with a long handled gaff, hooked out the purple black liver, brought it over the side and dropped it into one of the deck tubs. The shark thrashed and writhed, his flukes quivering and his gills distended. Wilbur could not restrain an exclamation.

"Brutal business!" he muttered.

"Hoh," exclaimed Moran scornfully; "cutting-in is too good for him. Sailor folk are no friends of such carrion as that!"

Other lines were baited and dropped overboard, and the hands settled themselves to the real business of the expedition. There was no skill in the matter. The sharks bit ravenously

DRESSER FOR CONGRESS

Received His Second Nomination at DuBois Thursday

THE LEADERS PRESENT

Notable Assembly of Republicans from All Parts of the 21st Congressional District.

MR. DRESSER MADE A SPEECH

Hon. S. R. Dresser was renominated by the conferees of the Twenty-first district, who met at the Commercial hotel, DuBois, Thursday afternoon. Mr. Dresser and a number of the conferees, delegates to the state convention and leading Republicans of the district, arrived at 12:30, a number of them just returning from the Republican state convention at Harrisburg. They came in a special car, by way of Clearfield, and many as were anxious to get to their homes and avoid remaining away over night, there was no time lost after dinner in getting down to business.

The conferees, all of whom were present, were as follows :

Cameron: Cap. J. C. Johnson, W H. Howard, L, W. Gleason.

Centre: Col. W. F. Reeder, Chas. G. Avery, C. P. Long.

Clearfield : Roland D. Swoope, Leslie Stewart, Hugh McCullough.

McKean: O. F. Schonblom, M. M.Orr, F. D, Gallup.

Mr. Swoope was elected to preside and W. H. Howard and C. G. Avery were chosen secretaries.

Mr. Swoope opened the conference with reference to the nominations made by the state convention the day before, to the polical conditions of the Twenty-first district and the bright promise of a larger majority for the Republican candidate for Congress than was given two years ago, when the first election took place following the formation of the district. He announced that the conference was ready to proceed to business. Cap. Johnson,of Cameron, moved that a recess of ten minutes be taken, explaieing that those from his county wished to confer before nominations were called for. The recess was taken after which the roll of counties was called for the presentation of candidates.

Cap Johnson responded for his county, offering the name of Captain Chas. F. Barclay. The nomination was seconded by a conferee from McKean, Mr. Dresser's county, who stated that it was an amicable understanding and did not signify a contest when the name of Captain Barclay was offered.

When Centre and Clearfield counties were called there was no response. When McKean was called Mr. Orr placed Mr. Dresser before the conference with a very earnest but brief address. This nomination was seconded by Colonel Reeder, of Centre, and Hugh McCullough, of DuBois.

When the voting was called the three Cameron conferees voted for Captain Barclay, the nine others of the three other counties voting for Mr. Dresser. Before the result was announced the Cameron conferees asked to have their votes changed to Dresser, and when the result was handed over to the chairman he announced the nomination of Mr. Dresser by a unanimous vote and declaired him the Republican candidate of the Twenty-first congressional dis. trict.

At the conclusion of the business the following resolution was offered and adopted :

"WHEREAS : We have learned of the serious illness of Hon. W. C. Arnold, who so ably represented the 28th congressional district in the 55th and 56th congresses, who is now in a sanitarium at Rockford, Ill.

"Resolved, therefore, that we express for him our heartfelt sympathy and the earnest hope that he may be speedily restored to health and to his family,and that this expression be this day wired to him as the sentiments of this conference."

County Chairman Blum, of Cameron, County Chairman Chase, of Clearfield, J. O. Brookbank, of Cameron, nominated by the state convention for presidential elector' ex-Judge Gordon, Judge Patton, of Armstrong, Hardman P. Harris, of Centre, Mr. Donovan,of Kane, North, of Bradford, J. H Brown, of Penfield. and many others were in the crowd that was gathered by this occasion.

Mr. Dresser, after his nomination was announced, was called for and he made a very pleasing short address.

Cap. Barclay also addressed the conference briefly. after which the conference adjourned.

Death of Joseph Strouse.

After an illiness of stomach and bowel troubles that had its beginning early last fall the venerable Joseph Strouse, a well-known Ferguson township farmer, passed away at his home at Pine Hall on Monday April 4. He had improved somewhat recently, but several weeks ago he became worse again and it seemed that neither the best medical skill nor the tenderest nursing would prevail against the disease.

Deceased was of German descent, a truly christian gentleman of simple, frugal habits, whose life was a daily example of good citizenship and charitableness. While of a very retiring disposition he was always very active in matters of public interest, in church work and in Democratic politics. Though he never sought preferment he had held almost every local office within the gift of the people of his community. Early in life he became connected with the Lutheran church, remaining a useful active member to the last.

He was born at Springtown, N. J., Jan. 24th. 1839. When only a lad he came to this county with his father, the late Thos. Strouse, who was among a party of settlers to locate about Pine Hall, which was known then as the New Northampton district. Joseph assisted in clearing the farm that has been the family homestead ever since. It is one of the landmarks of the community, famous to this day for its prosperous appearance and generous hospitality. Forty-one years ago he was married to Maria Anna Krebs, who survives him with the following children : Wm. F., Washington, D. C.; Thomes, of Baltimore; John, of Linden Hall; Charles, of Fillmore, and Luther at home. Their daughter Mrs. Reuben Glenn and one son died several years ago. His sisters Mrs. Adam Stover, Mrs. Fred Decker and Mrs. E. C. Fye, all of State College, and Mrs. Kate Garret, of Altoona, are also living.

Interment was made in the Pine Hall cemetery Wednesday afternoon, the funeral having been the largest in that section for years. Rev, C.T. Aiken, assisted by the Rev. A. A. Black officiated.

Death of Forest E. From.

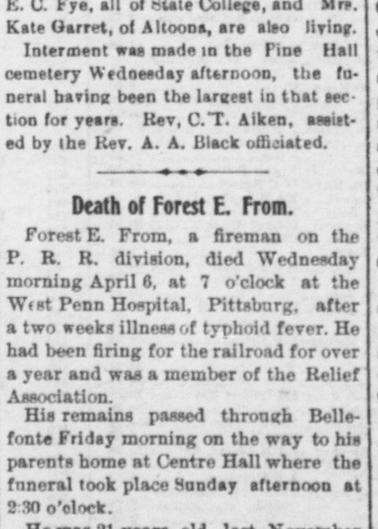
Forest E. From, a fireman on the P. R. R. division, died Wednesday morning April 6, at 7 o'clock at the West Penn Hospital, Pittsburg, after a two weeks illness of typhoid fever. He had been firing for the railroad for over a year and was a member of the Relief Association.

His remains passed through Bellefonte Friday morning on the way to his parents home at Centre Hall where the funeral took place Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

He was 21 years old last November and is survived by his parents and one brother, James.

Popular Pastor to be Given a Vacation.

The congregation of the Bellefonte Methodist Episcopal church wishing to show their appreciation of the successful labors during the past year of their pastor, Rev. John A. Wood Jr., at an official meeting on Thursday night April 7, voted him a vacation. He will take the vacation in May and will visit the General Conference of the Methodist church at Los Angeles, Cal., and will also visit friends in that state.



Over-Work Weakens Your Kidneys.

Unhealthy Kidneys Make Impure Blood.

All the blood in your body passes through your kidneys once every three minutes.

The kidneys are your blood purifiers, they filter out the waste or impurities in the blood.

If they are sick or out of order, they fail to do their work.

Pains, aches and rheumatism come from excess of uric acid in the blood, due to neglected kidney trouble.

Kidney trouble causes quick or unsteady heart beats, and makes one feel as though they had heart trouble, because the heart is over-working in pumping thick, kidney-poisoned blood through veins and arteries.

It used to be considered that only urinary troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all constitutional diseases have their beginning in kidney trouble.

If you are sick you can make no mistake by first doctoring your kidneys. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases and is sold on its merits by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling you how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. Mention this paper when writing Dr. Kilmer & Co , Binghamton, N. Y.

Adieu to Hotel Registers.

The old familiar hotel register may speedily become a thing of the past. A system has been devised to do away with the cumbersome book devoted to the signature of guests. One prominent hotel in Philadelphia has already taken up the system, and if it proves successful it will be adopted by other hostelries.

Under the new arrangement arrivals are handed a numbered card by the hotel clerk, upon which they inscribe their name and address. This card is then placed in a rack and the guest thenceforward figures on the books as a number only.

The cards are sufficiently large to contain a record of the guest's stay at the hotel, and upon it are inscribed all the charges he may incur, so that at the time of his departure it is an easy matter to prepare his bill.

Saving of time and trouble is the chief object of the new system, but with its adoption will come the disappearance of the type of man who spends an hour or two in studing the contents of the register for a year past.

Wedding at Nittany.

Tuesday a very pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of Samuel Tweed of Nittany. The contracting parties were Charles S. Beck and Miss Sadie E. Harris of that place. At 12 o'clock they entered the parlor, accompanied by B. F. Harris and Margaret Tweed. The ceremony was performed in the presence of over 30 immediate friends by Rev. H. Willis Hartsock, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church as Glen Hope, Pa. After congratulations were extended the happy couple, all repaired to the dining room, where an excellent wedding dinner was served. The bride and groom are well known people of excellent character, and are well fitted to make home happy and attractive. They were the recipients of many useful paesents. Their friends wish them many happy years together.

To Disprove facts. It is decidely easy to verify Bellefonte opinion

Nothing by way of an introduction could be added to the experience and opinions given below, which could increase their value. Bellefonte people can safely be left to draw their own conclusions based on such convincing proof as this citizen offers what is there lacking in evidence like this to satisfy a dyed-in-the-wool doubting Thomas?

Walter Whippo of Water street leading horse shoer of Bellefonte says: "I have a good word to say for Doan's Kidney Pills. I was miserable with backache and lameness across my loins. I know it was from my kidneys for I had suffered from it prior to that. Sometimes I could hardly straighten after bending forward which greatly interfered with my work. I learned about Doan's Kidney Pills procured them at F. Potts Green's drug store and began using them. Four Generations on a Farm.

What is better known as the Daniel Wolf farm on the pike about two miles east of Aaronsburg, has been in the occupancy of the Wolf family for nigh 110 years now occupied by C. W. Wolf, a son of Daniel Wol , dec'd. In 1786, the record shows, as found on the county docket by C. W. Wolf, the other day, the land was purchased from a Mr. Geiss, by George Wolf, great grandfather of the present occupant, C. W. Wolf. It next fell into and ownership of his son George and then Daniel, a son of the latter, became the owner. and after his death, the present occupant, C. W. Wolf' became the occupant and owner of a part of the farm and occupies the other portion still in the name of his father's estate. The latter, C. W., was born and raised on the place and is now 49 years of age. In all probability the name of Wolf will follow the ownership for one or more generations yet. It is one of the star farms in Haines township.

A Fly Wheel Bursts in Austin Paper Mill.

A few days ago the big 15 foot fly wheel in the Bayle s pulp and paper plant at Austin, Potter county. without any warning suddenly broke all to pieces and went out through the roof and sides of the building in huge chunks.

The Wellsboro Advocate says that the wheel weighed 10 tons, and the fact that a small army of people were working at the factory at the time, and not a single person was injured, marks the accident as miraculous. When the rim let loose from the spokes it tore an opening in the roof fully 30x60 feet. One piece which would weigh fully 1,500 pounds went more than 500 feet across the valley and main road, up onto the the hill side, while another chunk fully as large went high into the air and came crashing down onto one corner of the boiler room, tearing it away as though it had been paper.

Ferguson.

Mary, wife of Street Commissioner William Ferguson, of Philipsburg, died at that place Sunday evening April 3, about 7 o'clock in her 49th year.

In November, Mrs. Ferguson, was seized with grippe which affected her heart and produced dropsy, from which she died. While she has been ailing for months, Mrs. Ferguson's condition was not considered critical until a few days before her death. Besides her husband, Mrs. Ferguson leaves a large family to mourn her death, namely: Andrew, Elizabeth, widow of James Clark, George, Peter, David, Catharine, Annie, Edith, John and Jacob. Her mother, Mrs. Catharine Hoffman, an aged lady, who made her home with her daughter, three sisters and two brothers also survive.

The afflicted family have much sympathy in the loss which they have sustained. A private funeral took place Wednesday afternoon.

Rightnour Bags and Jails 'em.

On Tuesday detective Rightnour arrested a lot of gentlemen of color up at Scotia. It appears they were detaining a colored girl who belonged as a pauper to Allegheny county, and when constable Hartsock, of Patton township, went to Scotia to get possession of the girl and have her sent to the overseers of Allegheny county, a set. consisting of four colored fellows, gathered around him and with axes, pistols and other weapons, made fierce threats and drove the constable off, who proceeded to Bellefonte and swore out a warrant for the quarto who had resisted the officer. The warrant was placed in the hands of detective Rightnour, and he proceeded to the seat of trouble with one or two aids, and on Tuesday night arrested three of the fellows while in bed,the fourth one having been landed in jail by the detective Thursday morning,and placed in Sheriff Taylor's boarding house to await trial at November term of court.

Mrs. Matilda Strauss.

relict of William Strauss, died at her home north of Penn Hall on Monday, after several weeks illness, aged 56 years. Mrs. Strauss was a daughter of John Stoner of Millheim. She has left to survive ten children. Funeral services were held Thursday morning at 8 o'clock from the house and interment made at Tylersville, Clinton county. Rev. F. E. Laufer, of the Reformed church, conducted the services.

High School Commencement at Blanchard.

The second annual commencement of the Liberty district High school of Blanchard began with the baccalaureate sermon delivered at 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon by Rev. H. I. Crow, pastor of the Reformed church of Hublersburg, in the Disciple church and in the presence of a very large congregation. Rev. Crow took for his text, "Let your light so shine before men that others seeing your good works may glorify your Father which is in heaven." His theme was that no education is complete, no matter how scientific and comprehensive, unless it embraces a deeply sought knowledge of the Creator, the Christ, and His Word. The sermon was very impressive and eloquent, and delighted the hearers. A choir of 25 voices rendered several anthems splendidly under the leadership of the veteran chorister, Joseph Pletcher. Rev. M. C. Frick had charge of the services and made the invocation.

On Tuesday evening commencing at 7.45 the Junior class held their exercises. The members of the class who took part were Anna Robb, Ruth Clark, Harris Clark, Wm. Ridge, Emma Bitner, Mabel Linn, Stella Earon, Mae Harter, Nellie Winslow.

On Wednesday evening they held their commencement exercises. The address to graduates was delivered by Hon. John G. Love, President Judge of Centre county.

The members of the graduating class are Miss Vivian H. Snyder, Miss Mary Johnston, Russell H. Bechdel, Orlando C. Bowes, Lee I. Bitner, Thomas B. Clark, B. Russell Clark, James K. Morrison and Samuel I. Bechdel.

Great interest is being manifested by the public in the commencement exercises which are an innovation in Blanchard. Prof. Milford Pletcher, the principal, deserves great credit for his enterprise and his conduct of the school. The directors of Liberty township are John M. Morrison, George Eaton, E. T. Bechdel, William Batchelet, David Bechdel and D. W. Clark.

VIN-TE-NA.

Those Who Have Been Cured Talk to You About The World's Greatest Tonic.

"After having suffered 22 years with catarrh of the stomach, Vin-te-na cured me," writes one "My son," says another, "was threatened with loss of hearing as a result of catarrh of the head. Vin-te-na completely restored him." Another threatened with consumption, says: "I have taken two bottles of Vin te-na, have gained ten pounds, and know that I have found a cure. I consider it my duty to reccommend Vin-te-na to my friends." POPULATION OF UNITED STATES!

According to the Census Bureau Bulletin for 1903 It is 79,900,-389.

A LARGE INCREASE

There are 438 Cities Having a Population of 10,000 and Over—New York Leads.

CHICAGO HAS ALMOST 2,000.000

Washington, April 8.—The census bureau yesterday issued a bulletin which gives the estimated population of the United States for 1903, exclusive of Alaska and the insular possessions of the United States as 79,900,389. This is an increase of 3,905,814 since the census of 1900. The population is estimated for 438 cities having 10,000 or more inhabitants in 1900. According to these estimates, New York is now a city of 3,716,137 inhabitants; Chicago is rapidly approaching the 2,000,000 mark, having 1,873,880 inhabitants; Philadelphia has 1,367,716; St. Louis has just passed and Boston has almost reached the 600,-000 mark. Baltimore has 531,313; Cleveland is now a considerable distance ahead of Cincinnati, which cities have 414,950 and 332,934 respectively. Buffalo also has considerably increased its population, being credited with 281,403 inhabitants. San Francisco and Pittsburg are close competitors, the former having 355,919 and the latter 345,043. Detroit, Milwaukee and New Orleans have just passed 300,000 and Washington is close to that figure.

Considered by states, New York leads in population, with more than seven and a half million; Pennsylvania exceeds six and a half millions and Illinois has passed 500,000. Texas has over 3,000,000, having passed Missouri, but twenty-two states now have less than a million inhabitants and fourteen exceed 2,000,000.

The estimates are made in a bulletin giving estimates of population in 1901, 1902 and 1903 for all cities of 10,000 inhabitants or more in the United States.

The estimates of the population in Pennsylvania in 1903, of all cities given 25,000 and upwards are as follows:

Allegheny, 138,013	Allentown, 38,573.
Altoona, 41,565.	Chester, 35,995.

Bald Mountain Drops Out of Sight.

Caribou, Me., April 8.—Proof that the New England earthquake of March 21 had its origin in Northern Maine was furnished, when a guide came up from Tiboque and affirmed that where old Bald mountain had reared its rounded head for centuries, only a new-born lake exists to mark the spot. Bald mountain is—or was—situated in the Tiboque valley, only a few miles from the New Brunswick line, not an imposing mountain, to be sure, but rather somewhat conical-shaped hill, celebrated for its inaccessible steep sides.

The natives who live where Bald mountain was, say they always thought it a little queer because at the base were boiling springs, so warm that one could not put his hand in them in winter. Near by is a hill called Plaster rock, which furnishes plaster so good it is used for building purposes. This was recently analyzed and found to consist of merely melted rock and earth, and all this leads to the belief now that Bald mountain was the cone of a volcano, which when it sank March 21, caused what all New England called an earthquake.

A few days ago a party of woodsmen came in to say that the guide's story is true, that where the mountain formerly stood there is now only a muddy looking lake.

Caribou is a town of more than 4,000 population. It is situated on the Aroostook river, a branch of the St. John. The town is in the extreme northeastern part of the state, about ten miles from the Canadian border.

Bald mountain was twenty-five miles directly north of Caribou. The gazetteers do not state its height.

HEALTH SUGGESTIONS.

The Evils of Over-dosing. The Ways in Which Health May be Found in Exercise, Correct Diet, Clothing, Habits.

BY CHRISTINE TERHUNE HERRICK,
Author of "Cradle and Nursery," "First Aid to the Young Housekeepers," "Housekeeping Made Easy," "What to Eat," "In City Tents,

(Copyright, 1904, by Christine Herrick.)

As a nation we have never learned that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. We forge gaily ahead, doing what pleases us and fail to awake to the fact of our folly until we reach a point where we have to go to work to repair injuries.

It would be a comfort if those who take a deep and peculiar joy in saying "I told you so," could feel that this sort of blunder was confined to men. But women hold a prominent place in the ranks of those who possess a capability for recklessness and a faith in remedies. Several causes have joined to produce this state of affairs.

In the first place, women are too busy. They always cut out more than they can accomplish and go on the principle that there are at least twenty-seven hours in every day. If their work were purely selfish one could condemn them unreservedly. But as a rule a big share of it is done for others. Had the ordinary woman a sense of proportion she would see that sometimes she does more for those about her when she does less, so to speak. In other words, if she would spare herself a little there would be a likelihood that she would be able to stand for more in her family and social life. But this is something that is hard for her to learn.

A woman almost always means well, if she didn't there would be more chance for her. She might be converted from the error of her ways. But her ways are so good that there seems no ground for criticism. Yet even while she justifies herself in her course of overwork she feels that something is wrong, somewhere. I heard one woman voice the opinion of many not very long ago.

"I have so much to fill my hands," she said. "I work all day and have comparatively little time to be with the children. And when the active employments are out of the way and I want to give myself to my family there is nothing left worth giving."

There is the trouble. The woman breaks herself down by over exertion in some good objects. She does not take time to preserve her health. She wears her nerves to what is popularly known as a "frazzle," and then she takes medicine to build herself up.

On the ground of "live and let live" her attitude and action might be justified. For what would become of quacks and patent medicines if it were not for the woman? Men patronize these, too, but after all, the women, with their generous confidence that there is a panacea for every evil under the sun, are the best patrons of proprietary remedies. I have said that women lack a sense of proportion. In nothing do they display this more than in the faith that they can labour for years to make themselves physical wrecks and then restore themselves to health and strength by a few bottles of some well advertised heal-all. If they could once have it borne in upon them that "earth bears no balsam for mistakes," that it takes longer to climb up hill than it does to run down and that it is easier to keep well than to get well they would have made a long stride towards health and happiness.

Of course it might not be so interesting! There are still plenty of women who "enjoy poor health." If they did not have something the matter with them, what would there be to talk about? They would have lost one of their most absorbing topics of conversation. Moreover, they would miss the delight we all know in being worse off than our neighbor. Every one who has read "The Mill on the Floss" recalls the pride Mrs. Pullet felt in the amount of physic she had taken a pride which her husband shared.

"Pullet keeps all my physic bottles," said Mrs. Pullet. "He won't have one sold. He says t's nothing but right folks should see 'em when I'm gone. They fill two of the long store-room shelves already The pill boxes are in the closet in my room,—but there's nothing to show for the boluses, if it isn't the bills."

The American husband may not be quite so complacent about his wife's physic record as was Mr. Pullet, but there are plenty of women who openly or unavowedly, cherish the same modes pride as to their doctors' and druggists' bills.

Apart from this class are women who are so busy at their various avocations that they do not take proper care of themselves. "I never know I am tired until I break in two in the middle," I heard a woman say once. There are many like her. When the "breaking in two" comes, it is natural that the victim should turn to what palliatives she can find and endeavour to repair damages by drugs.

Not for a moment would I criticise the physician or belittle the advantages of medicines. But it is much better to keep well in the first instance, or if one can, to bring oneself up after one is run down, by natural common sense methods than to make one's stomach a general depot for drugs of sorts.

Such common sense ways are not far to seek. In fact, they are so close at hand, so every day, that sometimes something nasty taken out of a bottle they are condemned on that very account. The patient feels as Naaman did. If some hard thing were required, it would be done, but diet, exercise, correct clothing seem futile, useless things. A doctor prescription, appeals far more to the imagination

But let us consider the common place remedies. The question of diet should be studied by every woman both for her own sake and for that of her children. The mother of a family should know that there are certain foods that build up bone and muscle, others that make flesh, still others that may please the palate but do little besides. She should learn what these are and give serious thought as to how to combine them to win the best results for her family. She should know that food may be wholesome and yet appetizing, that food which tastes good is more easily digested than that which does not tempt the appetite. If she will bear all this in mind she will grow to feel that her profession as a housekeeper, which she may have thought of as a small thing, is in reality a very important affair.

Much of the prejudice against wholesome food, in the minds of the lords of creation, at any rate, is due to the ides cherished by most of them that the fool that agrees with them must be unpleasant and that which they love is pretty sure to be considered bad for them by the advocates of rational diet. There is just enough truth in this to furnish them with a ground for their complaint. It should be the work of the housekeeper to provide a variety on her table and if she feels that, for the sake of peace in the family she must furnish some unwholesome articles, to sandwich these in between other items which will make less strain upon the gastric powers. It can be done, but it takes time and trouble.

It has become a truism that we are a nation of dyspeptics. Once in a while one hears some happy man or woman boast of an unimpaired digestion. But that same fortunate person is likely to take advantage of such luck and do all sorts of rash things. The truth is seldom appreciated that the person who begins by feeling he can eat everything generally ends by not being able to eat anything.

At least, let the child be started right and an attempt made to supply him with a tolerably good stomach. Even if he can eat almost anything without distress, it is extremely foolish to let him do it. He is using up the powers of stomach which should stand by him in later life. If he makes drafts on his principal now he will have none to fall back upon when he is older. Do not allow him to indulge in sausages and griddle cakes and hot bread and pies and pastry and pickles and similar deadly, if delectable dainties. If he has never had them he will not miss them and the fact that he would enjoy them should move you no more than does his plea to be allowed to consume unripe fruit. In either case he must pay a penalty. Yet the mother tries to spare him the anguish which will come from green apples and cheerfully permits him to suffer that which follows other unwholesome articles of diet.

There are sundry conditions which should regulate the provision of food a mother makes for her household. The man, woman or child who takes active outdoor exercise can digest a food that would lie heavily upon the stomach of the person who leads a sedentary life. This distinction should be borne in mind when planning the day's meals. The members of the family who will engage in vigorous bodily wark, outdoors or indoors, will need something more substantial to eat than those who are to be seated at a desk or typewriter or sewing machine. The latter should eat more lightly and their foods should be selected from among those articles that give nourishment without overtaxing the powers of digestion.

We all know persons who think it a simple matter to eat indigestible food and then take tablets of pepsin or something else to assist the overworked stomach. I heard a young girl who came of a line of dyspeptics asserting triumphantly one day that she could eat almost anything without subsequent discomfort if she only put enough red pepper on it.

"My child," said an elderly man who heard her, "that may answer when it is absolutely necessary, as you grow older. But you are too young to be sticking spurs into the side of your stomach like that."

When it comes to the question between sticking in spurs in the first place or applying remedies to cure the harm the spurs have done, one is hard put to it to decide which is the greater folly.

Three York Firemen Killed and Several Injured

FIRE IN A BIG FACTORY

Carriage Works Goes Up in Smoke—From Appearance of the Bodies all Must Have Met A Terrible Death.

THE LOSS WILL REACH $250.000

YORK, April 7—Three firemen lost their lives, several others were injured and a loss of about $250,000 was caused by fire Wednesday afternoon which destroyed the large plant of the York Carriage company. The plant was consumed with its inflammable contents and much adjoining property damaged during the afternoon.

The firemen worked late into the night. Shortly before 10 o'clock a wall fell, burying beneath the red-hot bricks Harry Saltsgiver, Horace F. Strine and Lewis Strublinger, all members of the Vigilant Fire company, No. 1. The bodies were recovered an hour or more later. The men must have had a horrible death, judging from the appearance of the bodies.

Two members of the same company, Ralph O'Shaughnessy and William Jones, were severely injured at the same time.

The origin of the fire is not known. It started in the wheel room and went off almost like paper, the 260 employes barely escaped with their lives. The loss to the plant is about $200,000; insurance $90,000.

Other losses are to buildings and stocks of adjoining places as follows. Variety Iron Works, $4,000, Ernst & Bupp, agricultural implement dealers $6,000 insurance not known; also dwellings of John Minskea, U. F. Cox, D. H. Gressley and H. M. King and Hill's barber shop The York Furniture company and J. A. Walker had goods stored in a warehouse nearby. The loss is several thousand dollars.

The York Carriage company is composed of S. E. Bailey, Philadelphia; J. C. Schutte, Lancaster; George W. Ryan, York, and U. F. Cox, York.

Simple Cure for Gapes.

I have such a simple and sure cure for gapes in chickens that I hasten to send it.

My cure is for twenty-five chickens. Take flour of sulphur, one teaspoonful; mix in wet cornmeal; feed once a day for three days; omit three days, then feed in rotation until well, and gapes will disappear in seven or eight days, and I assure you none will die after three feeds. When I commenced this treatment I had a flock of thirty-five chicks; had been losing three or four a day; I was so sure it was no good I gave a teaspoonful every day for a week and never lost another chicken.

The chickens soon put on a healthy look, their feathers grew so fast and glossy the improvement was a surprise to me. My neighbors asked me what new feed I had put my poultry on. I have so much faith in the sulphur remedy I feed it whenever I have a sick chicken. I never lose my chickens by an epidemic of croup or chicken cholera.—A Farmer's Wife, in Farm, Field and Fireside.

The Spelling of Corea.

The languages of the Mongolian race, to which the Chinese, Japanese and Coreans belong, are called "agglutinative," because they run together monosyllables, which each express a single idea. To express in English, which is a more or less phonetic language, the exact translation of any agglutinative word or sentence, is almost impossible. The best we can give is the sound, and that not always accurately. It is practically unknown where the name Corea or Korea originated. The difference in spelling is purely arbitrary. The first sound in it is that of K, and it makes little difference whether you spell it Korea or Corea. The real name of the country, according to its people is "Cho-sun," which means, "morning calm." The name Corea or Korea is not known by them.

ELAINE ROZE'S NEW YORK LETTER.

The Oriental Era in Dress and Perfumes. Dress for Out-of-Door Life.

Out-of-door life the woman of today will have, and whether golfing, riding, automobiling or walking, as her taste or purse may indicate, she must be suitably gowned. No longer are her gowns for more formal wear giving precedence but she recognizes the importance of making a judicious selection of her gown for general wear, for undoubtedly she will be more often seen in it than in any other.

Let it be trig and neat—jaunty as she likes, but never "fussy." Let it be of material that is comfortable, stylish, and of all things, weatherdefying, which is entirely possible in these days of rainproofed clothe.

The vast majority of New York womankind face the April vagaries of Dame Nature fearlessly, in serviceable gowns of bright mohair or nattily woven mixtures of Australian wool and silk. Priestly Cravenetted, these frocks give to the wearer a smart appearance if the sun is shining, and an equally up-to-date look if caught in a shower.

In my illustration is depicted one of these ideal gowns, worn with a washable white silk, lace-trimmed waist.

The little kimona here shown is a bit of prettiness that the dawn of the Oriental era in dress has brought us.

There has never been anything more picturesque than the kimona with which the Japanese beauty has coquettishly, with the true grace of artistic temperament, draped for form for more generations than exist in Occidental records of attire.

For many years we have been appreciative of the beauties of Oriental fabrics, as adapted to cozy corners and negligee garments, but today these exquisite creations are receiving enthusiastic recognition in their use in the construction of dainty gowns, and happy is she who has a bit of Oriental embroidery or a scarf that she can fashion into a fascinating stock or charming bodice.

And the popularity of the Oriental atmosphere has permeated the perfume field, and where until recently milady's every movement recalled to us the scent of some familiar flower, we are now wafted back, in the quaint odor of Vantine's Sandalwood, to our childhood's recollection of the dear old sandalwood fan.

The dress skirt worn with the charming negligee garment of the Flowery Kingdom is one of the most modish creations in cream Peau de Crepe, which has taken front rank among silks for shirtwaist and lingerie purposes, as well as for gowns for formal occasions, and in white is one of the leading silks for wedding gowns.

Sometimes the hired man needs a starter just as much as the cream does to fit it for churning.

Hen manure may be used for a lawn dressing to advantage if mixed with three times its bulk of earth. It should be used very sparingly.

No matter if seeds do retain their vitality more than one year, we would always use seed of the previous year's growth if we could. Age with seeds usually means impairment.

Florida produced 2,000,000 boxes of oranges the past season. The plantations have largely recovered from the disastrous freeze of a few years ago, and the crop will increase yearly from now on.

The Frenchman has learned how to use the culls of American apple orchards in the shape of dried apples and manufacture a dry champagne which when sent over here graces the boards of our nabobs.

The Jersey two-year-old cow Tonona IX. ate during the year 1903 $62.38 worth of high priced feed, but her milk product sold for $250. She gave an average of twenty-two pounds of milk per day, but it was nearly all cream.

We saw a ten acre field of red clover the other day in which there must have been at work last season a thousand pocket gophers, for they had literally honeycombed the field from end to end. This fellow is a great pest in the clover fields.

A graceful trailing vine of some sort always adds beauty to a porch or a recessed corner of the house. The Virginia creeper, the rambler roses, the moon flower, the passion flower and clematis can each be used with much satisfaction.

The value of a succulent ration for stock in winter, especially the dairy cow, the brood sow, the ewes and the poultry, is conceded by all, and while various root crops will furnish such a ration it still can be more easily and cheaply secured through the silo than in any other way.

An agricultural journal formulating a dairy ration for one of its readers advises giving the cow all the wheat straw she will eat in connection with other foods. We do not believe that wheat straw or sawdust has any place on the bill of fare for the dairy cow. There is about as much milk in wheat straw as there is in a fence post.

Adulteration of food products has gone further in the line of sweets from the maple tree and buckwheat flour than in almost any other thing. No man who handles these products is expected to guarantee their genuineness, and if he does he is not believed. Every state should have a pure food law not to prevent adulteration, but to compel the selling of such adulterated food products for just what they are.

The very finest quality of wheat, oats, barley and flax that we have ever seen produced in this country came from the far north, where it is nip and tuck for these cereals to mature between spring and fall frosts. The quality of these cereals is not only high, but the yield is immense in the good crop years, but it looks like taking quite a risk to run the chance of a frost when the wheat is in the milk or a six inch fall of snow when the oats are well in bloom.

A very attractive bit of lawn decoration can be made with a dozen cannas, using for the center of the bed a plant of the dark foliaged type and surrounding this with others of medium height, with the outside row made up of the dwarf kinds. This arrangement is for a circular bed. A dozen plants are enough for a six foot bed, and they want a very rich sandy soil and during the hot weather all the water they can get. They should not be set out until the last of May, and will cost about a dollar for plants at your greenhouse.

A friend has a dozen thrifty hard maple shade trees with trunks six inches in diameter growing where he does not want them and wants to know if he can successfully remove them to another location. A tree as large as these and presumably with a heavy and wide spreading top, as such trees would usually have grown where they had plenty of room, could not well be moved and have it live unless the top was also mostly removed. As most of the feeding roots of such a tree would be cut off in the process of removal, it would be necessary to cut back the top to correspond, and in the case of so large a tree the mutilation would be a severe shock. We have set many shade trees out—maples and elms—and have always had the best success by trimming the top down to a bare pole.

We note that the men who most strongly advocate the keeping of dual purpose cows do not keep them.

A plant of alfalfa ten feet from root to tip was grown on the Colorado desert from the seed in seven months under irrigation.

The hired man will take kindly to cleaning up the barnyards when you give him a manure spreader to work with, though he always hated the job done in the old way.

The Cuban reciprocity treaty, or a large supply, has brought around the time when the people are getting twenty pounds of sugar for $1. They ought never to get any less and should get more.

It is said that a little vaseline rubbed on the teats of a cow that is hard to milk with dry hands will answer every purpose of lubrication and make such cows easy to milk. It is worth trying.

Foresight is a most valuable trait for a farmer to cultivate. His present is so closely linked with his future that if he cannot look ahead his chance of winning success is slim. Varying present conditions compel equally varying future ones.

It is the woman who has much to do with the unsurpassed excellence of Dutch cheese and Danish butter, and the best type of European women in the matter of health, strength and beauty is found in direct connection with the dairy business.

We note that the English sparrow has a great liking for the long and pliant fibers which are to be found on all telegraph and telephone poles when they get the nest building fever on. We saw a dozen of these birds at work on one pole the other day busily stripping the fiber off.

One of the very best types of European agriculture is to be found in Holland on lands reclaimed from the ocean and which lie twenty feet below the level of the ocean, protected from it by dikes. These lands, largely in grass, are made to produce an annual income of $100 per acre and over.

A growing industry and a new one is the production of bulbs on the islands in Puget sound, where climatic and soil conditions favor the production of bulbs—lilies, tulips, gladioluses, hyacinths—in every way the equal of those produced in Holland, a country which has enjoyed a monopoly of the business for centuries.

One very pleasing feature of the present spring is the reappearance of the bluebirds in large numbers. For several years they entirely disappeared, and we thought we had entirely lost this most cheery harbinger of spring, but here he is back again, ready to go to housekeeping as of old in the box you have prepared for him.

We think that the owner of the sandy farm is more to be pitied than any other farmer. The wind whips his fields, in a dry season he can raise nothing and in a wet one his fertilizers are leached away and largely lost. We could stand a hilly farm, a flat and wet one, a stiff clay and quite a sprinkling of rocks, but would steer clear of the sandy farm.

The breakfast food craze has about subsided. Scores of concerns which claimed for a tablespoonful of parched wheat or other grain a nutritive value equal to a pound of beefsteak have gone to the wall and quit business. Breakfast food is all right, and a few of the old standbys in oat and wheat preparations survive, while the high priced trash has almost disappeared, to the great relief of the retail grocers all over the country.

Very primitive methods still prevail on many of the best farms in Europe. The wooden plow still stirs the rich soil of the Nile valley. The scythe still cuts the harvest of hay and grain in the Netherlands. The wheatfields of England are still gleaned by the women, as in the days of Boaz. The cultivated area of the island of Jersey is nearly all spaded over by hand. Dogs take the place of horses as haulers of produce in Belgium, and the vast beet fields of Germany represent an almost infinite amount of patient and unceasing hand labor.

Science is doing more for agriculture and its allied branches today than for any other profession. In the line of manufacturing, mining, transportation and engineering it would seem as though the limit of improvement was well nigh reached, while with agriculture the field of possibilities is every day widening. The abundance and cheapness of land in the past, which made it possible and easier to draw upon the earth's stored fertility than to devise ways and means of conserving such fertility and increasing the yield of farm products, have come to a full stop, and the question of fewer acres, larger crops, a more humane and intelligent treatment of the soil confronts every farmer. Within five years more has been learned about soil physics, the value of improved seed and breeds of domestic animals, the numberless insect and bacterial pests which beset the crops and stock, than during the entire period of agricultural development in this country. This most valuable knowledge is constantly increasing in power and widening in its scope through the medium of agricultural journal, experiment station and farm institute.

THE OAT CROP.

The oat crop of the country is yearly increasing in importance. It is one of the most valuable nitrogenous foods produced on American farms, and its use in various forms as cereal foods for a man is increasing by leaps and bounds year by year, a fact which speaks volumes for the good sense of the American people from a dietetic standpoint. The sturdy physique and morality of the Scotch people have long been properly credited to a happy combination of oatmeal and the Shorter Catechism. The production of this crop is not keeping pace with the increasing demand, and the lack of increase in acreage is further aggravated by quite a general deterioration of the product in all the latitude south of 42 degrees, largely owing to the use of run out seed grain and the attempt to grow the crop in a forced and uncongenial course of rotation. The oat belt is commonly supposed to be synonomous with the corn belt, save that oats may be raised, giving larger yields and better quality, far to the north of such corn belt. While the increase in acreage from 1880 to 1890 was 75 per cent, or from 16,144,000 acres to 28,320,000 acres during the decade, from 1890 to 1900 the increase in area given to oats was barely 1,200,000 acres, the corn crop crowding the oat crop out. The export demand, because of the higher prices which have prevailed during the past four years, has dropped from 74,000,000 bushels in 1898 to 8,000,000 in 1903, while the average price for contract oats on the Chicago market has been 22 cents for 1900, 32 cents for 1901, 37 cents for 1902 and 36 cents for 1903. The seed oats this spring through all the territory south of the latitude named, or covering what is known as the best of the corn belt, will be the poorest we have ever known sown, and unless nature by some sort of a miracle reverses the natural law providing that a man shall reap as he sows the prospect for the 1904 crop is anything but encouraging. We have previously urged the importance of changing seed, of getting seed grain from the more northerly sections—the northern half of Minnesota, North Dakota and Manitoba—and believe that therein lies the secret of vastly improving the yield and quality of the crop all through the corn belt. Oats grown south of latitude 42 are just like potatoes—bound to run out and deteriorate. What with the smut—which may be so easily prevented by soaking the seed in a formalin solution—much straw and imperfect development of the grain, has brought about the poor and profitless crop of thirty bushels of oats to the acre, weighing twenty-eight pounds to the bushel.

A DISGRACE.

The country schoolhouse should certainly be as attractive in appearance as the country homes which surround it, but it is very rarely the case. The average country schoolhouse with its surroundings is an utterly neglected and repulsive thing, a blur on an otherwise beautiful rural landscape, of dog kennel type of architecture, a lone tree or two trying to battle for existence in a hard sod or recover from the mutilation caused by using it for a hitching post, surrounded by a dilapidated fence and pleading for a coat of paint and an expression of patriotism from the men and women who send their boys and girls there to be educated. These things need not be and should not be. Local pride should make the schoolhouse and its grounds pleasant and attractive. It costs but little to set out a dozen good trees and care for them a few years. It needs a little paint and patriotism, just one or two women to make a kick, and it would be remedied in short order.

WHEN HE COMES WEST.

When a man from the east comes west and goes to working a farm he has some queer experiences. Trained all his life on the eastern farm to habits of the most rigid economy and saving, he is appalled at the seeming wastes on every hand connected with western agriculture. He quickly finds out that his western farm is too large and too productive to permit of the eastern ways. From the sheer force of circumstances he is forced to see lots of weeds grow in his cornfield, more or less waste of crops in the harvesting owing to the methods employed, little losses and wastes here and there all the time, just because there is so much stuff and so little help to care for it all. He does not like it at all at first, but finally comes to the sensible conclusion that if a thing costs more to save than it is worth when saved it is best to let it alone.

GRASSES AS FERTILIZERS.

There are some very erroneous notions as to the value of grasses as fertilizers. All the clovers are fertilizers of the first quality. Timothy is in no sense a fertilizer, but as much of a soil robber as any of our cereal crops. In fact, when it is allowed to produce a crop of seed it is worse than any of them. Blue grass is not a soil fertilizer, but the growing of it involves pasturing the field, and the turf when turned over and decayed furnishes a valuable supply of humus for the soil. All the grasses are weed killers and in this way benefit the land, but the clovers alone really regenerate the soil. The great cry of the farms both east and west is for more clover.

"THE HOUSE OF TROUBLE."

State College Thespians Scored a Hit in Farce Comedy.

The opera house held a large and fashionable audience Monday evening drawn there to witness the farce comedy "The House of Trouble" as produced by the "Thespians" the famous dramatic organization from the Pennsylvania State College.

The play was a laugh provoker from start to finish and the characters were all well taken by the young students. Especially excellent were the characters taken by F. J. Saunders, R. H. Lyon, C. L. Armsby, R. P. Campbell, J. F. Johnson and E. G. Bashore.

Not the least part of the enjoyment was the delightful music of the orchestra under the capable leadership of R. W. Bowers which proved to be a splendid treat.

The entertainment was under the auspices of the Bellefonte Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution.

William S. Harter.

We are indebted to our State College Correspondent for the following particulars of Dr. Harter's death.

Perhaps no event in the history of our boro for years has created the sorrow and sympathy that the announcement of the death of William S. Harter which occurred last Friday, April 8th, of cancer of the stomach. Most of our citizens knew that the Dr. (as he was familiarly known) was quite ill, but very few realized that it was so serious, all hoping that the time would come when the Dr. would be about with us again, his own jolly hearty self. God in his omnipotent wisdow willed otherwise and took from our midst one whose loss is irreparable, one whose jolly spirits, pleasant and accommodating manner made him friends wherever he went.

Born in Millheim Feb 17, 1870, he at the early age of 17 went to Chicago and worked in a large book store for a year. Tiring of a business which was to confining he returned to Bellefonte and clerked for his uncle who at that time was County Recorder. In 1890 he again went to Chicago and married Miss Bridget Gregan in June, and in Sept. entered the American School of Dental Surgery. With two years close application to his work he graduated from that institution with the degree of Dr, of dental Surgery. In 92 returning to Millheim he practiced his profession one year, and moved to State College, where he has resided ever since. Residing here but a short time he was elected Squire, which office he filled so creditably that at the expiration of his first term he was the unanamous choice of both parties for a second. Having a natural liking for law he made it a side study and was often in a position to impart legal information to those who desired such knowledge, doing it gladly and gratuitiously. In 1899 largely through his efforts a camp of the Modern Woodmen of America was organized which organization he was an active and enthusiastic member.

Holding the office of first venerable council but a short time he was elected District Deputy filling that office at the time of his death. In June 1903 he was elected deligate to the County and State Camps and there again elected delegate to head camp at Indianapolis, Ind.

He was an active member in both the Subordinate and Encampment branches of the I. O. O. F. and member of the Methodist church.

He leaves to mourn his death a wife, four dear little children and a host of friends, who will ever remember him as a loving husband, a good kind father and a generous open hearted friend.

Passed Over the River.

John Flanigan, father of Chief of Police James A. Flanigan, of Clearfield died at his home near Gillintown, Centre county Wednesday morning April 6 at the advanced age of 82 years. His death was due to the infirmities incident to old age.

Deceased was a native of Ireland, came to this country when a young man, married here and followed farming in the neighborhood where died for over 40 years. He was a good citizen, honest upright and industrious. He was a lifelong member of the Catholic church and died happy in the belief of a joyous resurrection. He is survived by his aged wife who is quite ill, and by four sons and four daughters two of his sons, James A. and John, and one daughter, Mrs. J. J. McNerney, reside in Clearfield. The funeral took place at Snow Shoe Saturday.

Settled for $10.

It cost a State College student ten dollars to see John Weaver fall from his bicycle Tuesday evening at the Centre Hall railroad station. A number of students came to Centre Hall on the train in the morning and from there walked to Penns Cave to view the cavern. On returning to Centre Hall they discovered that the train was late. Waiting grew wearisome, and to break the monotony, one of their number upset the bicyclist and paid the fine.

HEALTH
is the Most Important

In buying food-products, several things are to be thought of—i. e., Economy, Results, Easy Handling, Reliability, but the most important is Health.

Health means everything. In buying clothes, shoes, hats, furniture, etc., if the buyer is deceived and gets an imitation the only harm is loss of money. In buying food-products, if imitations are supplied, there is not only a loss of money, but perhaps an injury to health—which is beyond price.

Remember these facts when buying baking powder.
